NEW COLLECTION 2026 /2027

Flax, accounting for 80% of global linen production, is predominantly grown in Europe, particularly along the coastal regions of France and Belgium. These areas benefit from a unique climate mix of sun, rain, and wind, eliminating the need for artificial irrigation.

Linen cultivation is notably water-efficient, using 75% less water than cotton farming. The flax plant's resilience against diseases and pests minimizes the need for pesticides, and it thrives even on poor clay soils. This robust nature allows for good yields without fertilizers in linen production.

The transformation from flax plant to linen fabric involves several key steps. Linen is derived from the sturdy fibers nestled around the plant's long stem. A natural fermentation, or retting process, is used to separate these fibers from the stem's core. Initially, flax stalks are dried and then exposed to moisture from rain, which naturally breaks down the connection between the plant parts. After drying again and breaking into small pieces, the straw-like core separates, leaving the flexible linen fibers. These fibers are then combed and spun into yarn.

Winterhome leverages these high-quality linen fibers to craft their distinguished product line, celebrated for its sustainable production and natural elegance.

Timeless Luxury and Exceptional Quality

"Discover the timeless elegance of Winterhome's linen collection, designed to bring a new level of sophistication to every season. Each piece, crafted from meticulously woven pure linen, offers breathable lightness for the summer and cozy warmth for the winter, making them indispensable year-round.

Inspired by the natural beauty of the flax plant, this exclusive selection adds subtlety and luxury to your home, regardless of the time of year. Enjoy a harmonious blend of style and functionality.

Winterhome is dedicated to offering high-quality, exclusive products, with pure linen being a hallmark of their range. From flax production to the finished product, Winterhome opts for top-quality flax fibers, marking the beginning of their luxury textile production. The careful selection begins with cultivation and harvesting, emphasizing sustainability and craftsmanship.

Innovation is at the core of Winterhome, evident in their stylish and functional designs that align with the latest trends without compromising quality. Each item in the collection is a nuanced expression of elegance, fitting perfectly into both classic and contemporary interiors. For discerning customers seeking a blend of beauty and practicality, Winterhome offers the ideal textiles to embrace all seasons."
